Many Voices Into One Song

The First International Meeting on Indigenous Women's Health will be held in Albuquerque, New Mexico on March 4-6, 2009. The meeting provides an opportunity for Ob/Gyns, Midwives, Family Physicians, Nurses, Advanced Practice Nurses, Community Providers, and others who work with Indigenous women to come together to share, support, network, and build partnerships to improve Indigenous women's health.

Special Cultural Event, Friday, March 6 at 6:00 pm

Join us for a relaxing evening of cultural entertainment and an opportunity to network with conference delegates in a more informal atmosphere! This event will be held on-site at the conference hotel. Your evening will include dinner and a performance by local Indigenous entertainers. Be sure to attend this event and get a taste of Indigenous culture in Albuquerque! There is an additional fee of $60.00 to attend this event, and you can include your payment along with your registration fee.

Objectives

At the conclusion of this conference, the participant should be able to:

- Increase awareness of the changing health needs and unique solutions of women in indigenous populations.
- Improve the health status of indigenous women and their families through improved systems of culturally competent care.
- Improve the skills of health care providers who serve indigenous women in the areas of maternity care and women's health care.
- Increase collaboration and information exchange between those working in indigenous women's health and child health in both rural and urban settings internationally.
- Increase awareness of the importance of capacity building and advocacy in efforts to improve the health of indigenous women and their families.
