12:00pm-1:00pm (PT)

Presenter:

Cutcha Risling-Baldy, PhD, Associate Professor/Department Chair, Cal Poly Humboldt

Jude Marshall, Community Nutrition Manager, United Indian Health Services, Inc.

Description:

American Indian/Alaska Native (AI/AN) peoples disproportionately experience high rates of diabetes, obesity, and other diet-related chronic conditions. Lack of access to traditional, culturally appropriate healthful foods directly relate to food insecurity and chronic health disparities. AI/AN experience barriers to hunting, fishing, and gathering due to loss of land jurisdiction and loss of practical and cultural knowledge regarding traditional foods and medicine. This presentation will discuss indigenous food sovereignty.

Outcomes/Objectives:

As a result of participating in this activity, the healthcare team will:

1. Identify key building blocks of Indigenous Food Sovereignty.
2. Recognize the significance of food sovereignty and its impact on health outcomes.
3. Implement at least one strategy toward Indigenous Food Sovereignty.

Target Audience:

Physicians, Nurse Practitioners, Nurses, Pharmacists, Social Workers, Psychologists and other members of the healthcare team.
