Objectives

• Recognize strengths in patients and their families
• Recognize the basic principles of a strength-based practice
• Identify strategies to collaborate with patients and their families – to co-create a climate for change
• Recognize patients’ ambivalence towards change and identify strategies how to deal with it: key principles from Motivational Interviewing and Motivational Enhancement Therapy
Key Assumptions of a Strength-Based Approach

- We serve patients best by collaborating with them: patients are partners in their care rather than passively receiving the care provided to them.
- “Resistance” is not a useful concept: it implies the patient doesn’t want to change (as opposed to being ambivalent about change).
Key Assumptions of a Strength-Based Approach

- Use empathy, not authority and power: avoid an authoritarian provider-patient relationship

- Patients define the goals for treatment: support self-efficacy
Common Assumptions of Providers How to Deal with “Resistant” Patients: The Righting Reflex

- Give them insight – if you can just make people see, they will change
- Give them knowledge – if you can give them information, they will change
- Give them skills – if you can teach people how to change, then they will do it
- Give them hell – if you can just make people feel bad enough or afraid, then they will change

(Venner)
Resist the Righting Reflex

- Health care workers have a powerful desire to “make things right” – to fix things
- This is a problem because people have a tendency to resist persuasion, especially when ambivalent
- Resist the righting complex by recognizing it’s the patient’s role to argue and provide reasons for change while it’s the health care worker’s role to guide patients through ambivalence and understand their motivations
Key Assumptions of a Strength-Based Approach: CPR

Competence, capacities, courage
Promise, possibility, positive expectations
Resilience, reserves, resources

“Change can only come when you collaborate with client’s aspirations, perceptions, and strengths, and when you firmly believe in them.”

(Saleebey)
Key Assumptions of a Strength-Based Approach: Avoid Labeling

A person is a person, not a problem, pathology, disease or condition: avoid branding patients with names and labels
Key Assumptions of a Strength-Based Approach: See Crises as Opportunities

Trauma, abuse, illness and struggle may be injurious – but they may also be sources of challenge and opportunity
Key Assumptions of a Strength-Based Approach: Change

• Change is inevitable: think when change will occur rather than if
• Small changes snowball into bigger ones
• Patients have the strengths and resources to change
Key Assumptions of a Strength-Based Approach: Responsibility and Capacity

- Place responsibility for change explicitly on patients with respect for their right to make choices for themselves
- See capacity: generate an optimistic stance regarding change
Change Talk and Empathy

- Talk “Change Talk”: focus on what is working rather than what is wrong; convey optimism about patients’ ability to cope with life’s challenges or rehabilitate themselves – express confidence change is possible
- Use Empathy, not authority and power: meet the patient where the patient happens to be Resolving Ambivalence and Change

- Ambivalence: having at least two opposing feelings and attitudes at the same time

- Ambivalence can be resolved by working with your patient’s intrinsic motivations and values
Change and Discrepancy

- Develop patient’s awareness of discrepancy between present behavior and the change the patient desires. Patients should present the arguments for change, which you elicit by open-ended questions.
Questions to Evoke Change Talk

- Questions about the disadvantages of the status quo

What hassles have you had with your problem?

What do you think will happen if you don’t change anything?
Questions to Evoke Change Talk

- Questions about the advantages of change

How would you like things to be different?

What would be the good things about changing?
Questions to Evoke Change Talk

- Questions that support optimism about change

What do you think would work for you, if you decided to change?

What helped you accomplish something difficult in the past?
Questions to Evoke Change Talk

- Questions that support intention to change

What are you thinking about your problem at this point?

What do you think you might do?

(Venner)
Reflective Listening

Skillful reflective listening is essential to expressing empathy and acceptance: check in with patient whether or not you accurately heard and understood them instead of assuming you do.
Approach Patients with an Open Mind

Adjust hypotheses rather than gather “facts”: approach patients with a curious, open, inquisitive mind
Summarize

Periodically summarize – distill the essence of what a patient has expressed, then communicate it back. This reinforces you have listened carefully and prepares the patient to move on.
Listen for that DARN Commitment

- Desire to change: “I want to...”
- Ability or optimism to change: “I know I can...”
- Reasons to change: “It will help me to...”
- Need to change: “I have to because...”
- Commitment/Plans/Intentions to change: promise, will, vow, consider, may, plan to Elements of a Strength-Based Approach

Challenges (damage, trauma, disorder, stress, illness)

Resources (strengths, capacities, talents, gifts)

Expectations/possibilities (hopes, dreams, visions, goals)

Decisions
- Choices and options about paths to be taken
- Defining opportunities and setting directions
- Gathering resources and mobilizing strengths
